10. The second condition requires that the defendant's conduct be "reckless" and not "negligent." The Supreme Court has held that the difference between recklessness and negligence is that recklessness involves a conscious disregard of a substantial and unjustified risk, while negligence involves a failure to exercise reasonable care. In People v. Williams, 100 Cal. App. 4th 1000 (2002), the court held that a defendant who drives a vehicle with a known mechanical defect, such as a faulty brake, is reckless if he or she is aware of the defect and continues to drive the vehicle. In People v. Williams, the defendant was a police officer who was driving a patrol car with a known faulty brake. The court held that the defendant's conduct was reckless because he was aware of the defect and continued to drive the vehicle.
